HONEY-LOVER BEAR'S ESCAPE

I GUESS just about everybody knows that some bears are very lovable. And Honey-lover was one of those bears. He was a wonderful, chubby, roly-poly bear who loved honey better than boys and girls love ice cream and cake. And he spent all his time eating honey . . . or at least thinking about it.

One day when Honey-lover was snoozing under a maple tree, his head full of honey dreams, the circus people came to the forest, hunting for a bear. Yessir! They wanted a wonderful roly-poly bear to do a dance in the circus. I guess it was Micky, the trained monkey, who first spotted Honey-lover, curled up under that maple tree, and he hurried back, swinging through the tree tops to tell the circus people what he'd seen. "A fine, woolly, brown bear," he chattered excitedly, "sound asleep under a maple tree." My goodness, you should have seen those circus people scatter. They made a wide circle through the forest as Micky hurried back to the maple tree. They planned to get all around Honey-lover and then close in and capture him. Great Gussie . . . what a terrible thought!

At that very moment, Honey-lover was yawning a big yawn and stretching his arms high above his head as he started to wake up. "Now, where did I leave that honey pot before I fell asleep," he said aloud. And with that, he started to bat at the soft leaves around the base of the tree. Micky watched all this with great interest.

"Ah," sighed Honey-lover joyously, as he pulled his honey pot out from the leaves. "MMM," he added, as he took his first taste of golden honey. Up above, Micky Monkey decided that he was hungry too, and though monkeys don't ordinarily eat honey, we must remember that Micky was a trained monkey and they're just a little different from the average run of monkeys. As a matter of fact, Micky leaned over so far to get a whiff of that luscious honey, that he lost his balance (which is very different from the average run of monkeys) and fell . . . KERPLUNK . . . right at Honey-lover's feet, barely missing the precious honey pot.

This surprised Honey-lover because he'd never seen a monkey before. But he was a friendly sort of bear so he said, "Hello. Have some honey?" Micky was delighted and took a great big glob of honey to eat. And my, it tasted delicious. It was so good that he forgot all about Honey-lover and quickly gobbled up every last spec. "Gosh," said Honey-lover, somewhat amazed, "You ate all my honey. You must have been pretty hungry."

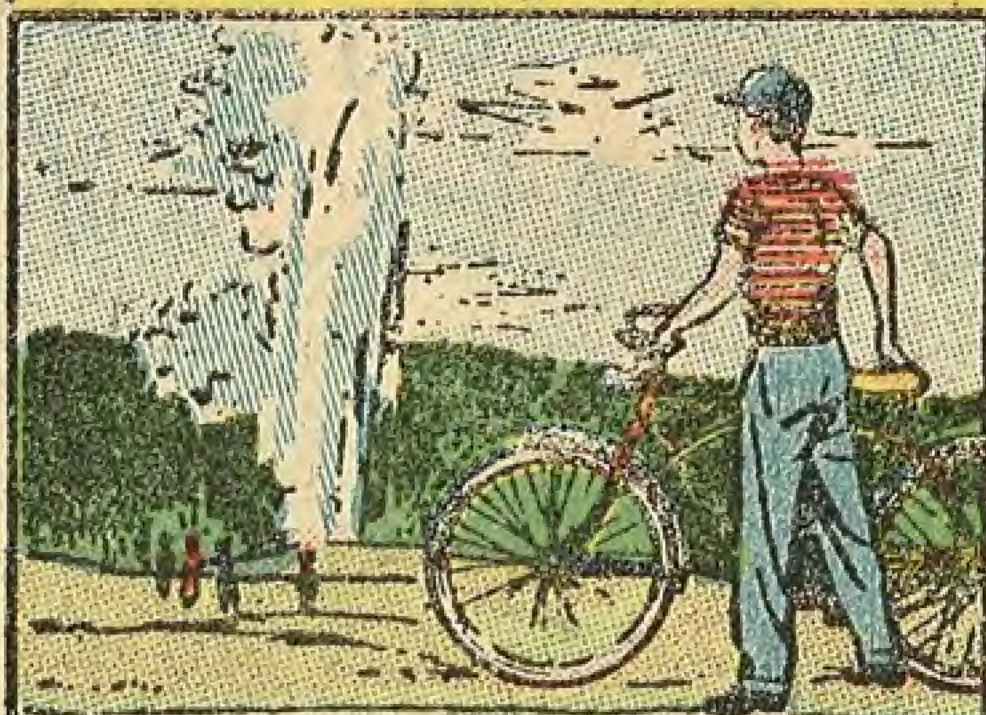

Actually Micky was very ashamed for eating up all that honey in such a rush, especially when he knew the circus people were closing in on Honey-lover. "G-golly," he began. "Oh, don't be sorry," said Honey-lover kindly, which was pretty nice of him because he was still a very hungry bear. Well, when Micky saw what a nice bear Honey-lover was, he felt even worse. "Have you ever thought of being a dancing bear in a circus?" he asked brightly. "I like to dance," said Honey-lover, "but I wouldn't like to be in a circus, I'm too happy here in the forest." And he started to stand up, "I'm going over to my honey storage depot and get another pot of honey."

Just then, Micky caught a glimpse of the circus people peeking through the bushes. "I hope you have lots of honey pots in that place," he said. "Uh huh, I sure have," said Honey-lover as he reached into a hollow tree. Right then, Micky Monkey swung up on his shoulder and started to chatter wildly into Honey-lover's ear. As he talked Honey-lover's bearish temper, that he'd inherited from his uncle Grumpy Bear, came to the fore and he whirled around, just as the circus people came out into the open. "NOW!" squealed Micky as he scrambled up the tree. And with a roar, Honey-lover started hurling those honey pots.

It was quite a sight. There stood the furious Honey-lover swinging those precious pots, full to the brim with honey, and then letting them fly . . . SPLAT—BAM . . . at the circus people. In a moment there were loud cries from everyone. When Honey-lover saw all the people dripping with the sticky stuff, he knew there was no time to waste, so he bent his head low and charged the line of circus people, scattering them in all directions.

He just kept right on running, never even taking time to look back, but all the while he was thinking of all the honey he'd lost. It was a pretty sad situation. Later, when he fell asleep in his warm bear cave, he didn't even dream of honey, which was very unusual for Honey-lover. But the next morning . . . guess what! He opened his eyes to see a whole heap of honey jars before him. As he blinked to make sure it wasn't just a dream, Micky Monkey peeked out from behind the heap. "Because you were so nice to me," he said, "I took my circus savings and bought you this honey." Honey-lover was so happy that he couldn't say a word. But I can, and I must say, I think Micky is very different from the average run of monkeys. Don't you?

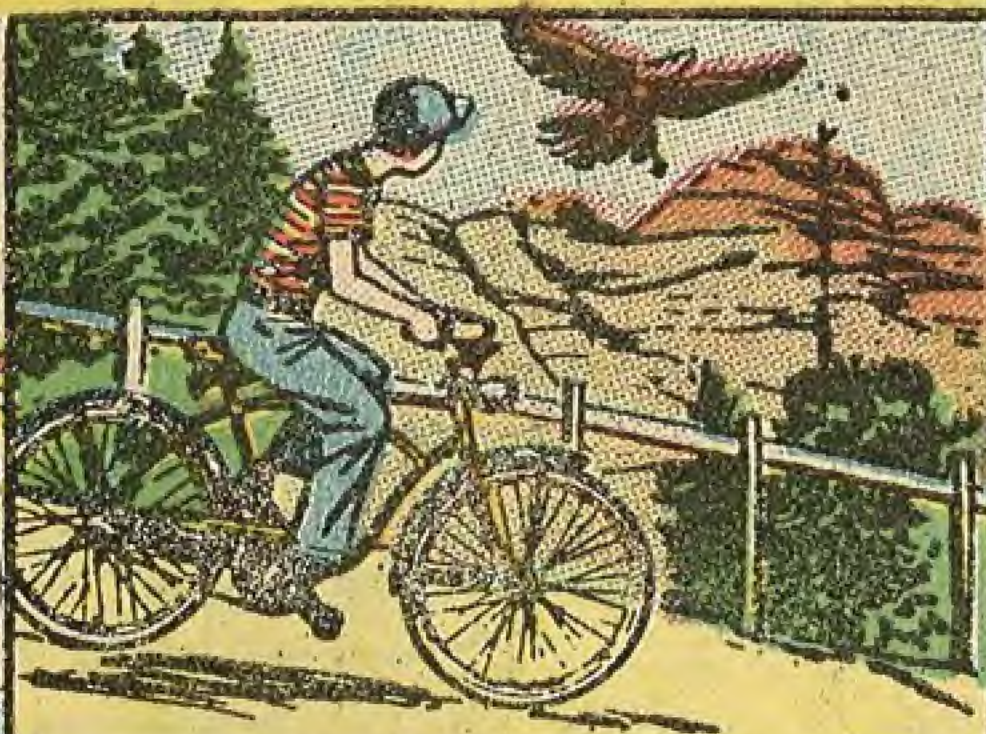

"I bike-hiked through YELLOWSTONE PARK on my SHELBY GOLDEN EAGLE!"

My first stop was Old Faithful, the famous geyser. She spouts boiling hot water 150 feet in the air every 65 minutes—night and day!

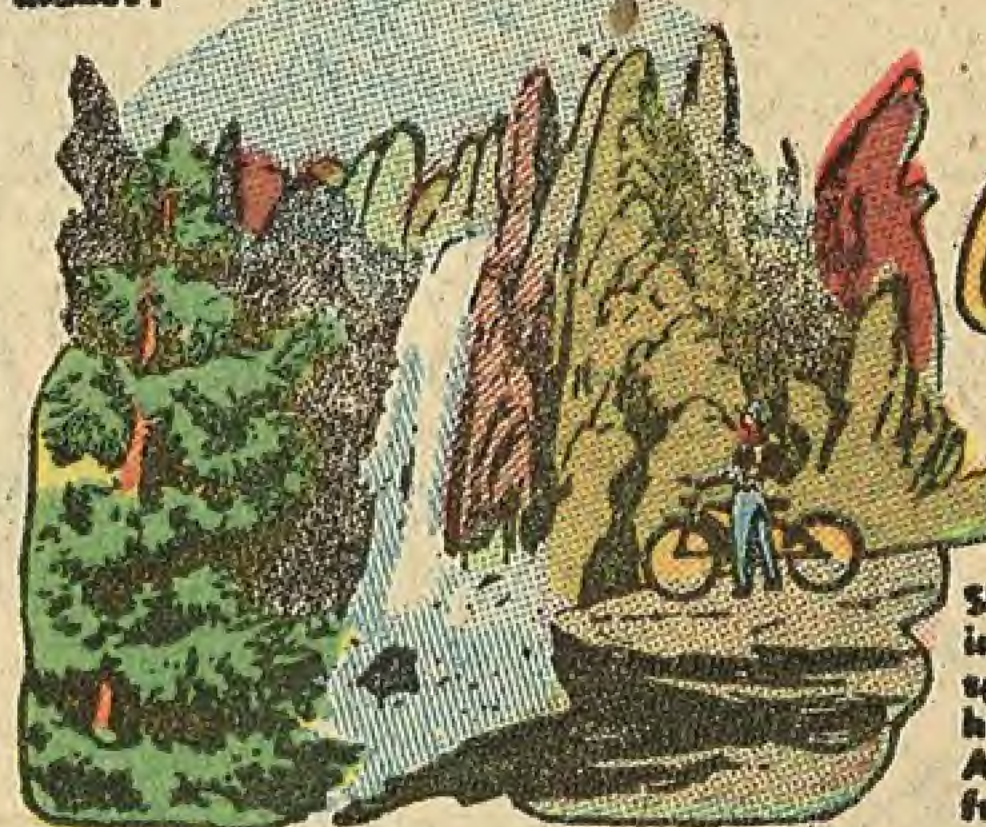

I came across a friendly-looking black bear. It's a good thing I didn't stop—I found out later they can be dangerous!

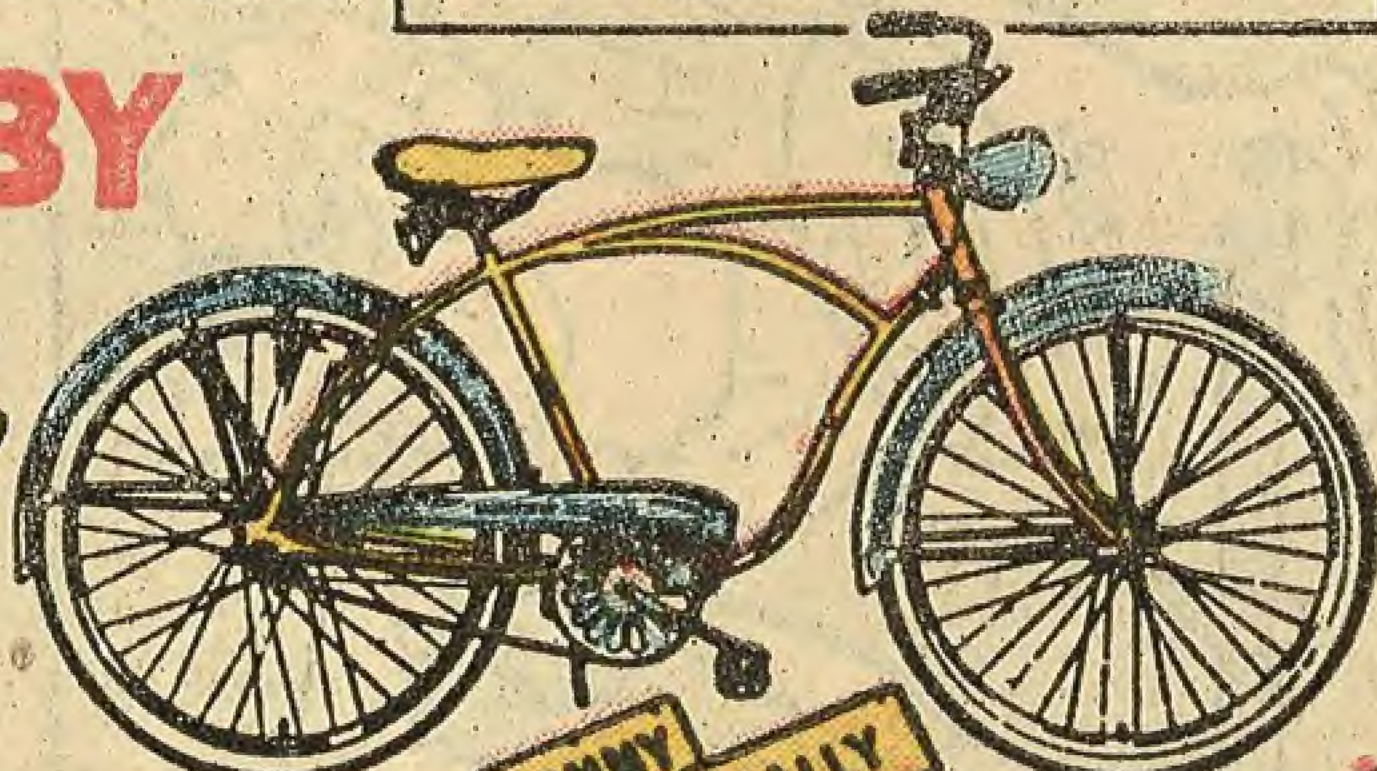

Gliding along on my Shelby, I saw a majestic-looking Golden Eagle—flying over a gigantic canyon.

Yosemite Falls was a beautiful sight. Water plunges 152 feet down over rugged boulders. And what a roar it makes!
